Management's Discussion of Fund Performance

SUMMARY OF RESULTS

Capital Appreciation Fund (Class NAV/JHCPX) returned 32.79% for the year ended August 31, 2024. Equities posted solid results driven by better-than-expected earnings across a broad swath of the market. Market influences included an end to the U.S. Federal Reserve (Fed) interest rate hikes and expectations for lower rates going forward. Further, continued progress on inflation moving towards the Fed target and positive resiliency in the U.S. economy resulted in strong GDP growth.

TOP PERFORMANCE CONTRIBUTORS

Information technology | In the information technology sector, accelerated spending on new computing power and AI applications fueled significant gains for several of our holdings including NVIDIA Corp. and Broadcom, Inc.

Health care | Portfolio holdings Eli Lilly & Company and Novo Nordisk A/S contributed to performance during the period. A new generation of weight-loss drugs originally targeting diabetes that are manufactured by these companies exhibited strong earnings as growing data-driven evidence indicated the pharmaceuticals also help treat heart, kidney, liver and obesity diseases.

Consumer staples | Costco Wholesale Corp. posted strong earnings and membership growth as the company continues to drive demand through its pricing strategy thereby holding a competitive advantage in the market.

TOP PERFORMANCE DETRACTORS

Inflated prices of goods and services forced consumers to tighten their budgets | This led to several of our consumer discretionary positions losing value, including shares in LVMH Moet Hennessy Louis Vuitton SE and Nike, Inc. which were both sold off during the period.

Airbnb, Inc. | Our holding in this position detracted from fund performance.
