Management's Discussion of Fund Performance

SUMMARY OF RESULTS

Diversified Macro Fund (Class C/JDJCX) declined 5.64% (excluding sales charges) for the year ended October 31, 2024. While performance was strong in the first half of 2024, several sharp reversals in global macro markets in late 2023 and the third quarter of 2024 were particularly challenging for directional systematic strategies to navigate. Short-term fixed income, currencies, and energy were the weakest performing sectors for the fund. Losses were partially offset by gains from positions in equities, agricultural and soft commodities, and precious metals.

TOP PERFORMANCE CONTRIBUTORS

Non-U.S. equities | The fund generated gains in equities from long positions in European, Japanese, and U.K. benchmark indexes, particularly during late 2023 and early 2024 when resilient economic growth and expectations for easier monetary policy led to strength in global equity markets.

Agricultural and soft commodities | Positions in cocoa, coffee and corn resulted in gains. Most of the profits in cocoa were recorded in early 2024 when extreme weather in West Africa drove prices to record highs.

Precious metals | Positions in gold and silver produced profits as both metals benefitted from expectations for easier monetary policy and elevated geopolitical risks.

TOP PERFORMANCE DETRACTORS

Fixed income | The fund incurred losses from long and short positions across the yield curves in the United States, Europe, and the United Kingdom. Losses mostly occurred during periods of increased volatility in bonds markets, such as late 2023 and early August 2024.

Oil and oil products | The fund experienced losses from long positions in oil and oil products, which generally weakened due to demand concerns from a weak Chinese economy and fears of a U.S. economic slowdown.

U.S. dollar | Losses resulted from net long exposure to the U.S. dollar, particularly in late 2023 and the third quarter of 2024, versus several global counterparts, including the Swiss franc, the euro, the British pound Sterling, the Australian dollar, and the New Zealand dollar.
