Management's Discussion of Fund Performance

SUMMARY OF RESULTS

Global Thematic Opportunities Fund (Class I/JTKIX) returned 31.17% for the year ended October 31, 2024. Global equities delivered strong performance as inflationary pressures subsided and a hard economic landing in the U.S. was avoided. With inflation edging closer to central bank target levels, interest-rate policy turned supportive. Sector-wise, information technology (IT) and communication services companies emerged as the strongest performers, with returns concentrated among a few large companies, particularly those associated with artificial intelligence (AI)-focused infrastructure investments.

TOP PERFORMANCE CONTRIBUTORS

Key AI beneficiaries | Semiconductor makers NVIDIA Corp., Taiwan Semiconductor Manufacturing Company, Ltd. and KLA Corp. were the strongest contributors to returns as this nascent market for AI chips continues to impress investors with strong profit growth and a rapidly expanding market.

Industrials | The fund's holdings in the sector were a significant contributor to returns. Schneider Electric SE rose on strong demand from datacenter and electrical infrastructure end markets while waste management provider Republic Services, Inc. was supported by solid earnings growth driven by strong pricing and continued shedding of lower margin business.

Health care | Sector performance was led by medical device maker Boston Scientific Corp., which delivered above-average performance thanks to product innovations such as its Farapulse device to treat irregular heart rhythm.

TOP PERFORMANCE DETRACTORS

Consumer staples | The fund's holdings in this sector were negative for the period. Cosmetics maker L'Oreal SA was hurt by weaker global demand, especially in Asian markets like China.

Weakness in specific holdings | The largest negative contribution came from Samsung Electronics Company, Inc. in the IT sector. The stock was hurt by product certification delays by a key semiconductor customer, greater competition in the semiconductor equipment industry, and cyclical headwinds in the semiconductor memory market. Athleisure company Lululemon Athletica, Inc., a designer of yoga apparel in the consumer discretionary sector, suffered from slower growth and worries over competitive pressures. Meanwhile, Sunnova Energy International, Inc. suffered due to high interest rates increasing financing costs to fuel solar project growth while demand for new solar installations was weak.
